8 ELEGY FOR A COLONIAL PERSPECTIVE

Bruce Gilley, a former contributing editor at the REVIEW, bemoans the end of an era in Asia when the region's elites shared a common set of values and aspirations.

12 NURTURING THE CHINESE ECONOMY

Joe Studwell, a British free-lance journalist, analyzes how China's economic development model draws on those of North-east and Southeast Asia, but the risky elements are growing.

18 THAKSIN'S DEAL WITH THE KHMER 'ENEMY'

Pasuk Phongpaichit and Chris Baker, Bangkok-based authors, and Bertil Lintner, a free-lance writer based in Thailand, survey recent developments in Thai-Khmer relations.

24 CHINA'S FAMILY PLANNING GONE AWRY

Nicholas Eberstadt, of the American Enterprise Institute, contends that China's "One Child Policy" is starting to have serious negative consequences for the economy.

27 HUMAN RIGHTS, SINGAPOREAN STYLE

Garry Rodan, director of the Asia Research Centre and professor at Murdoch University, examines the obstacles standing in the way of human rights progress for Singapore.

32 BULLETS TO BALLOTS: ACEH IN 2009

Ben Hillman, an advisor on elections and local governance in Indonesia, cautiously judges Aceh's elections a success, although the jury is still out on the local political parties.

36 WHY CHINA'S CHARM OFFENSIVE WILL STALL

David Bandurski, a free-lance journalist, argues that China won't be able to counter the West's "monopoly" on news until the government ditches its own monopoly on news.

40 CHINA IN OBAMA'S WORLD

Dan Blumenthal, resident fellow in Asian Studies at the American Enterprise Institute, asserts the Obama administration's emphasis on engagement means abdicating leadership.

44 THE FATE OF CHINA'S RIGHTS LAWYERS

Jerome Cohen and Eva Pils, law professors at New York University and the Chinese University of Hong Kong, respectively, sum up the last five years of little progress on legal reform.

46 THE LIMITS OF THE PARTY'S ADAPTATION

Nicholas Bequelin, a senior Asia researcher at Human Rights Watch, examines the question of whether Beijing can stay one step ahead of social demands before they lead to unrest.

48 PRESSURE BUILDS ON BEIJING

Jonathan Fenby, author of The Penguin History of Modern China, believes that the Communist Party's control fetish is rapidly running up against citizens' rising expectations.

50 REALITIES OF EDUCATION REFORM IN CHINA

Jiang Xueqin, deputy principal of Shenzhen middle school, recounts his experience of the battle against corruption and the culture of cramming for tests in China's secondary schools.

52 LAND REFORM LESSONS FOR ASIA'S GIANTS

Ron Prosterman, president of the Rural Development Institute in Seattle, Washington, traces the lessons from Asia's past land reforms for India and China.

54 THE JAPANESE HUMAN-RIGHTS PARADOX

Colin P.A. Jones, a professor at Doshisha University Law School, questions why Tokyo is unable to reverse its dismal human-rights record.
