

TIME

THE ANTI ANTIDEPRESSANT

Depression afflicts 300 million people.
One-third don't respond to treatment.

A surprising new drug may change that

BY MANDY OAKLANDER

6
8
0

- 2 | Conversation
- 4 | For the Record

The Brief

News from the U.S. and around the world

- 5 | A White House gone haywire
- 8 | Ian Bremmer on the erosion of liberal democracy in Europe
- 10 | A 20-year-old student is the face of Thailand's anti-junta activism
- 12 | Protests in Jerusalem's Old City
- 16 | A cold war takes hold with Qatar

The View

Ideas, opinion, innovations

- 17 | A cancer survivor on society's unrealistic expectations for coping with the diagnosis
- 19 | How climate change became political
- 20 | Mon dieu! Notre Dame's cash crisis pits the church against the state
- 22 | James Stavridis offers six ways to ease Europe's fears about the Trump-Putin relationship

The Features

New Hope for American Captives

Inside the effort to bring home Americans imprisoned abroad
By Elizabeth Dias 24

The Anti Antidepressant

A controversial new drug could help treat the millions of Americans afflicted by depression
By Mandy Oaklander 32

Blonde Ambition

As an undercover spy in Atomic Blonde, Charlize Theron is pushing the boundaries of female-led action films
By Eliana Dockterman 40

Time Off

What to watch, read, see and do

- 45 | Television: Jessica Biel is The Sinner; Kylie Jenner's new reality show
- 47 | What makes Rick and Morty so fun
- 50 | Studying the racism in classic children's books
- 52 | 7 Questions for nonverbal autistic writer Naoki Higashida

← Laurie Holt at a rally on July 7 in Riverton, Utah, to raise awareness for her son Joshua, who is imprisoned in Venezuela

Photograph by Michael Friberg for TIME

ON THE COVER:
Photo-illustration by Michael Marcelle